Collier's Writer Cynically Praises Hot Springs City

Gambling Houses Support Government, Magazine Editor Finds

SAYS SYSTEM GOOD

Will Gamble in Resort Anyway, Better Organized, His Opinion

Although famous for its baths, it is an organized gambling ring that supports municipal finances and enables Hot Springs, a city of 16,000, to accommodate 250,000 visitors a year, Walter Davenport writes in the current issue of Collier's magazine, now on sale at Hope newsstands.

Highly congratulatory of this Arkansas city is Mr. Davenport, who writes:

"After seeing New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles and similar superior cities spend billions for the preposterous macaroni they call government, one views little Hot Springs with respect."

Mr. Davenport, who is assistant editor of Collier's, entitles his article, "Sin Takes a Hot Bath." His story revolves about two men: Mayor Leo P. McLaughlin, and William Jacobs, head of the gambling clique.

Gambling, But No Crime

"Mr. McLaughlin, a practical moralist serving a third term," writes Mr. Davenport, "is distinctly unfriendly to crime and disaster, his definition of crime being something that the individual does not want to happen to him. Make the visitor pay, says Mr. McLaughlin, but give him so much fun that he forgets the price. Gangsters and racketeers, gamblers and dear old ladies with rusty joints, gamblers and two-bit criminals, kings and communists, gunmen and vegetarians, journalists and respectables—all are welcome to Hot Springs to cure their aches, indulge their weaknesses, cultivate their virtues. And as long as they pursue their individual ways, observing the great law of their neighbors' rights, Mr. McLaughlin guarantees them freedom, protection encouragement and who knows? their carfare home.

Even before the celebrated Diamond Joe built his narrow-gauge railroad into Hot Springs in the seventies, thereby hooking the town to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern road, Hot Springs had been a gamblers' rendezvous. Like spas the world over, gamblers make it their workshop. The best explanation I can give you for the curious affinity between medical springs and gambling is that the cure is costly and the patients simply have to have money. Further, the bathers are seldom so sick that they lack interest in recreation, and, suffering for the most part from the ills of overindulgence which the poor man rarely contracts, they find pleasure in spending on roulette what they might lay out for more gout. Sporting folk with sporting ailments...

Mr. McLaughlin Arrives

"Which brings us to the situation which Mr. McLaughlin has turned into a personal triumph. Now I do not go so far as to say that Mr. McLaughlin is the author of the Hot Springs Plan. So many lay claim to its parentage that it is better to let them squabble for the honors and

Bilbo Candidate Runs Far Behind

Hugh White Leads in Mississippi—Geo. Mitchell Running Last

JACKSON, Miss.—(AP)—Approximately half the returns on Tuesday's Democratic primary election gave for governor:

Hugh White, mayor of Columbia, 4,668; Mike Connor 3,750; Paul Johnson 2,176; and Mitchell 1,998.

Advance returns from incomplete boxes put White's total at 6,000, and Connor at 4,800. Although White has a considerable edge, the race still lies between Connor and him, with the Bilbo man far behind.

Governor Bilbo waged an active campaign in behalf of Mitchell. Dennie Murphree was well ahead for lieutenant-governor. Mississippi voters had to fight a ballot three feet in length, and election officials were compiling totals on 7,000 candidates.

CONWAY, Ark.—(AP)—Two Faulkner county sheriffs deputies were wounded, a negro was killed and three other negroes were wounded in a gun battle near Mayflower, following an attempt by the officer to arrest the slain negro for stealing peaches early Wednesday morning.

The wounded officers are Elmer Matchet, shot in the leg and not thought to be seriously hurt and Ed Hathaway, shot in the arm and shoulder. His condition is reported as being serious.

The negro killed was Major Harrell, 59 years old.

Those wounded are James Williams, 14, LeRoy Harrell, Major's son, and LeRoy's wife.

Officers had a warrant for Major on a charge of stealing peaches and went to his farm to arrest him. Seeing the officers approaching he called to his wife for his gun who opened fire on the officers, whereupon they shot and killed Major.

'Hobbies' Theme of B. & P. W. Program

Miss Maud Lipscomb Is Hostess at Semi-Monthly Meeting of Club

The Hope Business & Professional Women's Club enjoyed a splendid program with hobbies as a theme, presented by Miss Maud Lipscomb, on Tuesday evening, at the Hotel Barlow.

The dining tables, placed to form a large U, were decorated with two miniature Japanese gardens and bowls of gallerias, and the place cards were depictions of small hobby horses.

Dr. Etta Champlin spoke on hobbies in general and told of some unusual hobbies she had known of. One especially unusual one was a silver fox farm on Lookout Mountain, near Denver, Colorado, which was established by a Denver physician as a hobby, but which proved so profitable it very soon developed into a side-line.

Another was the love of children by unmarried women in a small Illinois town. Their hearts were touched by children being placed in State institutions and losing all touch with relatives and they began giving a home to any child whose relatives might at some time be able to again care for it.

This movement grew until now a large orphanage has been established, supported by public and private funds, and these benefactors have been called blessed by hundreds of children.

"Grand Old Man" of Tennessee Is Dying

"Alf" Taylor Wore the Red Rose Against His Brother Bob in Tennessee's "War of the Roses" for the Governorship in 1886

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn.—(AP)—In Happy Valley high up among his native Unaka mountains, Alfred A. Taylor, Tennessee's "grand old man" is slowly dying of a kidney ailment.

He is 83, and believing his end was near, returned some time ago to his native hearth in the green valley he himself named "Happy."

From this peaceful haven, Alfred Alexander Taylor and his brother, Robert, set out almost half a century ago to wage the famous "War of the Roses" campaign for the Volunteer state's governorship.

Riding together by day and sleeping in the same bed at night, Alf, the Republican, and Bob, the Democrat, campaigned the state from end to end, expressing brotherly love, but political animosity. Bob fiddled, Alf did fox hunting stories, and thousands assembled to cheer them.

"War of Roses" Origin Told

In one of his speeches, Bob referred to them as "roses from the same garden," and this so impressed the landlady at whose boarding house they stopped one night that she gathered two bouquets of roses, giving the white flowers to Bob and the red to Alf. Form then on their campaign was known as the "War of the Roses," after the British conflict between the houses of York and Lancaster, when red and white roses were symbols.

The brothers' mother exacted from them a promise to avoid personalities and to this they always adhered. In his closing speech of the campaign, Alf said:

"I say to you now that after all these eventful struggles, I still love my brother—love him as of old with an undying affection—but politically, my friends, I despise him."

On election day in 1886 the white roses were more numerous and Bob became governor, later serving Tennessee as United States senator. Alf represented his district in Congress for three terms, and then the "knight of the red rose" of 1886 became governor in 1920, being elected by the greatest majority ever given a Republican candidate.

Fiddled and Hunted

But politics with "Uncle Alf" was more or less of an avocation. He was at heart a fox hunter, a story teller fiddler and raiser of watermelons.

During his second campaign for governor, the "Sage of Happy Valley" would intermingle melody by a quartet composed of his sons with the plans of his platform. Just before his campaign started, Hal Clements, now collector of internal revenue and then chairman of the Republican State Executive Committee, dropped in Taylor's hotel to talk over plans.

But they had just started their conference, Clements recalls, when there was a knock at the door and in came Christopher Columbus Collins, the competitor of "Uncle Alf" in "the race for better watermelons." That ended the political discussion, Clements said, and watermelons were uppermost in their minds. "They soon had watermelons as big as washtubs," he said.

There was "old Limber," the fox-hunting hound that Governor Taylor made almost as famous as himself. The first thing he did upon becoming chief executive was to hang a painting of the dog in his office, where it remained throughout his term, a subject of countless stories of the chase.

Recover 19 Bodies After Bus Tragedy

More Than Twenty Drown as Bus Crashes Draw Bridge

GEORGETOWN, S. C.—(AP)—With 19 bodies recovered search was continued late Tuesday for other victims of the drawbridge tragedy here Monday night that claimed the lives of more than 20 persons returning from a picnic. The victims drowned when a bus on which they were riding ran into the draw.

The death list was placed at 23 by Georgetown county authorities. All of the victims were negroes except Warren Newton, owner of the bus, who had rented it to the picnic party, and his 20-year-old son, Olin.

The bus plunged into the capitol river on the outskirts of this city shortly before midnight. The bridgekeeper said the heavily loaded machine smashed through the protecting gates, discharging red stop lights, and into 40 feet of water.

150 Quit Work in Mine at Denning

Strike Follows Inauguration of Hand-Picked Scale

ALIX.—One hundred fifty employees of mine No. 2 at Denning walked out on strike Tuesday morning when the hand-picked scale of operations was introduced. Miners were in the mine when they were ordered to load nothing but lump coal. They walked out to a man. No increase from the 95 cents per ton was offered, and the miners say that the new scale is a 50 per cent cut in wages, due to the fact that half the coal when blasted forms slack. The walkout was marked by no untoward incident.

J. W. Steward, lessee of the mine, and Roy Milligan, traveling superintendent of the Western Coal and Milling Company, owners were in Denning this afternoon but there were no negotiations. Steward said that there is no market for slack coal and that the hand-picked scale must be adopted. It is said they will contend for the present mine run scale or an increase in tonnage rates under the new basis.

The body was found about 6 p. m. about 30 feet from the spot where the boy disappeared. The young victim's home was at Amazon, where his mother lives. He and his brother were visiting an aunt, Mrs. Jasper Mitchell, who lives near Elgin.

Threat Made Good By "Alfalfa Bill"

Governor Declares Martial Law, Shuts Down 3,106 Oklahoma Wells

BULLETIN

OKLAHOMA CITY.—(AP)—The first major reaction to the shutdown of Oklahoma's oil wells came from Texas Wednesday when East Texas producers offered to supply refiners here with crude oil at 10 to 15 cents on loading trucks in that area.

OKLAHOMA CITY.—(AP)—"Alfalfa Bill" made good his threat of "a dollar a barrel for oil, or close down the wells."

Governor Murray Tuesday night invoked martial law, and closed 3,106 oil wells in the prorated fields of Oklahoma. It was the fiercest executive's answer to present oil prices, 50 cents top, which has drastically reduced the tax percentage cut for the state's public schools.

National guardsmen established military zones around all but stripper wells, under instructions to maintain this control "against all orders whatsoever except an order from the president or the supreme court of the United States."

No opposition was encountered from the oil operators, but they announced an immediate appeal to the courts.

Congress Facing Debate On Relief

Unemployment Relief One of Next Legislature's Chief Concerns

By MARGUERITE YOUNG

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Unemployment relief legislation runs through forecasts for the next Congress with such shuttlelike regularity it seems likely to burst noisily into early discussions.

A long-range planning program for federal construction has just swung into operation, but the official in charge believes it will not affect conditions in the third winter of distress.

The most vociferously praised and berated prospect—a federal appropriation for relief—likely will be sponsored by advocates of a fund as high as $100,000,000.

Some administration supporters already are giving for battle against such move. Senator Watson of Indiana, the republican leader in the senate, said "of course" he would oppose it, unless he were shown people were starving or freezing.

Even bitter opponents of a "dole," however, are among the advocates of permanent, direct measures, such as unemployment insurance and old-age pensions.

Weight Pensions, Insurance

Senator Fletcher, a Florida democrat, disapproves of a dole, but believes "something must be done somehow." Senator Couzens, independent republican of Michigan, has declared for joint state-federal unemployment insurance and pensions. A senate committee is investigating to report on an insurance bill presented last session by Senator Wagner, New York democrat.

D. H. Sawyer, director of a new federal employer stabilization program, has set up the organization, provided by a Wagner measure enacted last session, to combat economic depression by accelerating federal construction with the approach of a downslide in business.

Outlines Future Program

With two economists and an engineer Sawyer is working up a plan of essential and desirable improvements for the next six years. He expects to report this schedule for about 35 federal bureaus early in the fall.

Train Master Reports Switch Bolt Had Been Pulled

VAN BUREN, Ark.—A section foreman and a passenger were hurt when a passenger train, number 10, derailed and plunged from the tracks near here early Wednesday.

The dead are Lee Ketter, engineer of Monette, Mo., and J. M. Woodward, of Fayetteville, Mo. The passenger was brought to a hospital suffering from severe injuries, broken ribs and possibly internal injuries.

J. H. McCommon, a section foreman, was injured in clearing the wreckage, necessitating the amputation of his right foot.

Glenn Presson, freight train engineer, said that apparently the switch had been pulled. "An investigation was made immediately," he said.

The engine left the tracks over and struck a shed. It was southbound. None of the passengers were hurt. Bodies of the dead were extricated from the wreckage three hours after the accident occurred.

The Banks' Service Charge

The banks this week announced a series of service charges on both personal and commercial accounts.

The announcement may be construed by the average man as a determination to keep Arkansas' banks on a profitable basis.

Bankers tell us there was too great an expansion of bank accounts during the past decade, and when the volume of business all over America declined after 1929 the banks along with other business men began to study their situation.

Expansion, we are told, was not only in the number of bank accounts, but their activity as well. It used to be that a man drew a check only when the sum was too convenient for cash. Today, checks do for trivial amounts.

Obviously the burden that the banks are complaining of is the scenes with the bookkeepers. It is the other side of the story which we seldom think of until it is forcibly brought to mind.

The service charges have been put into effect over the country, and were being considered in Hope a year ago. Commercial firms even then began to hedge on the banks' checking business, to cut down the book-keeping burden on the banks. Shortly after this time last year we cut out our payroll checks on the newspaper and began paying in cash. And it flashed on our memory then that in 1925, when with the Arkansas Gazette, that big paper with so many more employees and such an in-creased payroll always paid in cash rather than by check.

Undoubtedly, the banks invited checking accounts after the war, which they find embarrassing today. Yet it is also true that once being invited to make use of the pay-by-check system, the public helped run it into the ground. Every merchant, big city or small, is pestered with checks of abominable denomination. The public very largely has quit using cash.

It may be that the new bank service charges will encourage some folks to return to that habit. Yet for legitimate business customers, large or small, there is a wide opportunity in with the new order of things. We are seeing, in the general public's point of view, the last deflation of business depression—a deflation among the bookkeepers.

After all, when silver or a greenback goes over the counter, two persons are involved—the customer and the trader. But for every check there has to be, somewhere or other, a banker's bookkeeping entry.

An Encouraging Sign

A scriptural quota of three score and ten seems to mean nothing to Dr. Samuel Wesley Stratton, chairman of the executive committee of the famous Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Having reached his 70th birthday, Dr. Stratton now plans to live to be 100 but believes that he will do an enormous amount of important work in the next 30 years.

The chief reason for mapping out a new program of work at an age when most men think only of death or retirement is probably that he will be happier at work than he would be idle.

But the nation as a whole will be the chief gainer. As a scientist, Dr. Stratton plans to conduct extensive research on problems as flood control and the harnessing of water power. All of his fellow countrymen, directly or indirectly, will reap the benefit.

And that brings up a new angle to this business of an increased life span.

Science has considerably lengthened the life of the ordinary man in the last few decades. Usually we assume that the simple means more individual happiness. John Smith, a farmer, having longer life than their fathers, will have more fun, will play more, will get to understand life a little better.

But the chief gainer will be the race as a whole. Its best men will not drop out after two or three decades of activity. Scientists, teachers, artists, technicians of all sorts will be able to give the world more service than ever before.

It has often been remarked that death usually takes a man just as he has learned how to live. If the life span can be extended to a century this will no longer be so. A man like Stratton, instead of retiring at 70, will be able to begin his most important work. We shall stop talking about "retirement age"; instead, we shall reap the full benefit of the work of the veterans.

My Enemy—My Brother

OVER in Tennessee—in Happy Valley where he was born 83 years ago—there lies dying the man who seems to us to typify the most glorious tradition of America.

He is Alfred A. Taylor—the same Republican "Alf" who a generation ago wore a red rose against a white one borne by his Democratic brother "Bob" in their campaign for the governorship of Tennessee.

"Alf" Taylor lost that campaign. "Bob" was elected—the brother long since dead. He should have lived to see the red rose sweep to victory in 1920, when Alf carried everything before him, and Tennessee had signally honored the two Taylor brothers 34 years apart.

For what we will remember "Alf" Taylor is this—spoken from the stump at the last meeting of 1886:

"I say to you now that after all these eventful struggles, I still love my brother—love him as of old with an undying affection—but politically, my friends, I despise him."

Every Southerner knows the story of "Alf" and "Bob" Taylor, how one day on the stump Alf referred to his brother and himself as "roses from the same garden," and how the landlady at their boarding-house that night gave Alf a bouquet of red roses and Bob a bouquet of white. Tennessee caught fire to these valorous symbols of the English houses of York and Lancaster—and the campaign of the Taylor brothers became the American War of the Roses.

But the red rose of the Duke of York meant cruelty, fear and destruction. The red rose Alf Taylor wore meant courage, nobility and love.

"I love him as of old with an undying affection—but politically, my friends, I despise him."

That was the heartthrob of a great American, enunciating the cardinal principle of this democratic, self-governing nation. Alf Taylor could exhort his Democrat brother all day long, yet sleep with him at night, still his brother, heart and soul.

Politics seldom scales the sublime heights of the Taylor campaign of 1886, yet there is something akin to Alf Taylor in the heart of every great politician; and if there is a cornerstone to the American commonwealth after the Constitution it is the blood-strain that has given this nation men of the Alf Taylor stamp to cultivate campaigns and continue government in the peaceful paths of political argument.

This is the illusory Utopia of other ages and other climes that has become an American commonplace. We seldom think of it. The red rose of York might tear the heart out of the white flower of Lancaster half a thousand years ago; revolution may sweep America below us, or Europe east of us—but these things touch us not.

The whisper of Alf Taylor's mother to brother Bob and him as they went forth that day in 1886, to maintain their respective issues but to avoid hatred—that whisper has run across the sounding-board of political America.

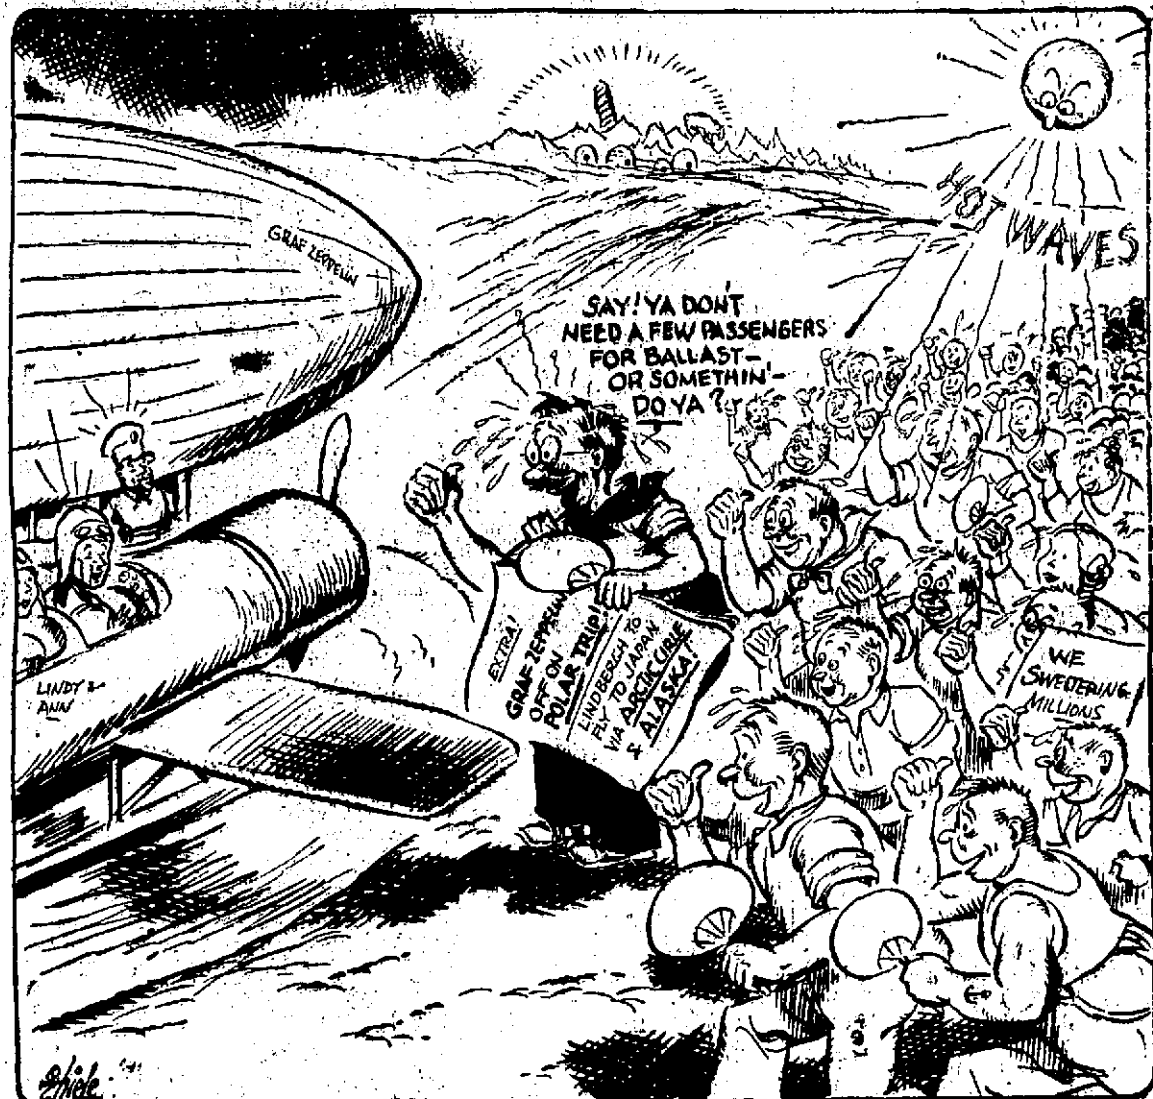

There is a virtue in politics and a grace in government which despises low argument and mean morality. We may say we vote on the issue, but the truth is we are passing judgment on men. Otherwise, now did Tennessee elect one brother in 1886 and another in 1920? She simply elected both of them the first time they weren't running against each other.

We call this leavening spirit in politics "personality," and because it moves us more than we know, we treat it disparagingly. Yet it is perhaps the one cohesive factor after the common racial instinct, that holds this nation together—and since it has not been uncommon for the same race to be cutting each other's throats, we would rate it the more important of the two.

Noble spirits flaming across the campaign stump, only to drop back in the comfortable shadow of one's own home and fireside after the day's work is done—this is the perennial drama of politics that has kept government and nation together.

Let us stand up for Alf Taylor—dying out yonder in Happy Valley. He was the very noblest of those who showed us how it is done.—W.

Cincinnati Gets First Run in 45 Innings—Drops Two Games

Cincinnati broke its string of 45 consecutive scoreless innings by tallying one run in the sixth frame of its contest with the Chicago Cubs Tuesday, but lost the game anyway, 4 to 2.

The Cubs captured the second game of a double-header, 7 to 1. Prior to the Pittsburgh had won four straight shut-outs. Jess Haines, on the mound for the Cardinals, tamed the Pirates with seven scattered safeties.

The New York Giants outplayed Brooklyn to capture both ends of a double-header, 6 to 3 and 3 to 2. Fred Fitzsimmons pitched a better game than Watson Clark in the first clash, while Bill Walker had the edge over Dizzy Vance in the second game.

The Phils and the Braves broke even on a twin bill, Philadelphia taking the first, 3-2 and Boston the nightcap, 4-2.

The big guns of the American League were silenced Tuesday either by rain or a blank date on the schedule. Chicago's White Sox hammered two Detroit pitchers for a 5-to-1 victory in the only game played in the American. Victor Frasier, of the Sox, chalked up his second victory of the series against Detroit. In Tuesday's game he held the auto city men to eight hits. Detroit had won the two middle games of the series, giving the teams an even break at two-all.

COLLIER'S WRITER

hope that truth prevails. But Mr. McLaughlin, who is so worldly wise, so facile with the ploys of the underworld, so comprehensive in his knowledge of why boys go wrong, so thoroughly aware of what he is doing that he seems curiously out of place so does Hot Springs) in that naive sector of the country, is operating it as no predecessor has had the courage and skill to do.

"When, some time ago, it became apparent to the designers of the Hot Springs Plan that free-lance gambling could not be controlled, the town looked about for a strong man who could be relied upon to co-operate with its government and conduct the gambling racket on modern business lines. It meant the banishment of many a picturesque character whose departure would leave the general scene the poorer, who would take with him many of the hectic hues that warmed the eye of the distant beholder. But the truth about him is that he was generally a thug and a marauder, up to no good and fit for nothing worth having. A picturesque bum. Hot Springs wanted a business man.

"She got him, after many were considered. His name is Jacobs. Mr. Bill Jacobs of Memphis.

"Make Yourself Comfortable
"His is the historic side of the town's main street. There thrive the Southern Club, the Kentucky Club, the Ohio Club, the Arkansas Club and several more, smaller, not so famous. There, without any silly effort at dissembling, they hold forth urbanely, smooth as the pearl in Mr. Jacobs' cravat. Walk in and be beamed upon by Doc Klothe, Goldie Gardner, Matt Pichi, Roscoe Johnson, Cleveland Young or any other of Mr. Jacobs' managers. You are not solicited. Your affairs and intentions are assumed to be your own business and therefore inviolate. Walk in. You need no introduction; sit down. The chairs are huge and comfortable. You may bet on any race being run in any park. Or guess at the number and color the roulette will settle in. You can bet on baseball games or tennis matches. There's a cup game yonder (very popular) and just beyond that door you can find out how good you are at stud. Or you can just look on. No obligation whatever.

"Of course it's illegal. The Arkansas law is specific about it. You are liable to jail or a fine, your only solace being that you won't go to jail and you won't be fined. Mr. McLaughlin says so. Under the law Mr. Jacobs is a criminal. His business is set down as unlawful, and nasty penalties would be his reward if the state officers didn't understand perfectly that Hot Springs needs Mr. Jacobs more than he needs Hot Springs.

For the most part, the clergy and the other rigid church people outside of Hot Springs prefer to repudiate the whole thing, the whole city. They prefer to take the attitude of the parent who banished from his door the erring daughter. Conveniently, they assure you that Hot Springs is Hot Springs and not Arkansas nor any part of Arkansas.

How the Plan Works
"Even Mr. McLaughlin appreciates that gambling is unlawful. It is clear to him, being an excellent lawyer, that his friend Mr. Jacobs is pursuing an illegal profession. Mr. McLaughlin used to be city prosecutor. So naturally something had to be done about it. The Hot Springs Plan took care of all that. And Mr. Jacobs' contract (a verbal one with the strength of a gentleman's agreement between gentlemen) removed all doubt of the Plan's working qualities. Of course, too, if Mr. Jacobs doesn't co-operate, out he goes.

"Every so often, then—sometimes weekly and in off seasons every two weeks depending upon how much money the city needs and how the gambling racket is going—Mr. Jacobs and his boys trudge to City Hall and pay a fine. You can call it what you wish; the City Hall calls it a fine. But there's no nonsense about it. Mr. McLaughlin doesn't have to admonish them. They appear voluntarily with the money in hand. No grouting nor sullen looks.

"The fine assessed against the gamblers is not an arbitrary one; it depends upon the city's budget—how much it owes. For example, there is the sewage-disposal plant that the city is about to build—a four-hundred-thousand-dollar project designed to safeguard the health of a little valley hamlet which now does the care of 250,000 visitors each year. We are to meet the requirements of the permanent population—16,000 souls, the huge majority of whom work either for the baths, the hotels or Mr. Jacobs—a hundred—thousand-dollar plant, or none, would do. If it weren't for the baths and Mr. Jacobs no plant at all would do nicely because there would be no Hot Springs.

"How, then, do you suppose this be no Hot Springs.

small wage-earning town would build a four-hundred-thousand-dollar sanitary outfit? By taxing its non-industrial citizenry? By imposing ruinous excises upon the hotels? By asking the government—which, by the way, lays down the most stringent health rules for the hotels, the privately-owned bathhouses and the city generally? Not at all!

"No. Mr. Jacobs and his house managers will take care of it. Those periodic fines will build the sewage-disposal plant that the United States Health Service and the health authorities of Arkansas demand. Thank you, Mr. Jacobs, call again.

"Similarly, who is going to provide the money for street paving and cleaning? The hotels and bathhouses? Don't be absurd. You don't understand, perhaps, that only by keeping busy all the time are the bathhouses large-profit producers. If it were left to the bathhouse proprietors to fix the rates for baths their income would be much larger and far speedier. But the United States fixes the rates, just as it supervises the bath attendants and stipulates how you shall use the water. So Mr. McLaughlin has to look for money for his highway department in other pockets.

"Gambling produces it. Mr. Jacobs and his associates have contributed as much as $40,000 a year to Hot Springs' streets.

"Crime is bad for business and Mr. McLaughlin is a thoroughly business-like gentleman.

"'Look here,' said he to me, 'all that you have heard about police work of the deduction school—Sherlock Holmes stuff—is the bunk. Cops don't solve one crime in ten thousand with their brains; they do it with their ears. The cop's best friend is the stool pigeon. Hot Springs has plenty of them. Well, sir, if a stool pigeon can tip a cop off as to who committed a crime, why can't he inform the cop of the presence of a person who is given to committing crimes? No reason in the world. See? The most efficient agent of crime prevention is the stool pigeon. That's not a theory. We know, it works here.'

stabilization board headed by Secretary Lamont.

Social service groups, who bear the brunt of stretching organized charity funds over expanded needs, are conjecturing on legislation prospects because they believe that public funds would have to be distributed through government agencies and might affect their own work.

In general it is said, the social service workers oppose a federal appropriation except as a very last resort—beyond public allotments by cities, counties and states.

But the fact that some in fear and some in hope consider Federal funds inevitable, in view of probable political conditions in the new Congress, is reflected in that a large group of social service workers recently considered, in New York, the means of distribution most acceptable scientifically.

They agreed that if the Red Cross declined to do such work with federal money, the best agency would be the federal children's bureau, with its welfare and maternity boards in various states.

Miss Nelle Bennett told of some hobbies which the Club might adopt, which would be mutually beneficial to itself and the community at large. She urged that our club go out and form new clubs and that we adopt a time budget which would probably stimulate attendance and interest in our meetings.

During the business session, presided over by Miss Mary Arnold, president, matters of routine importance were discussed. It was suggested that club members join the "dry peaches movement" for the Red Cross, but it was held to be inadvisable when so many of the members could not see their way clear to take on this type of work because of business or professional duties. However, it was decided to co-operate in any way possible, even though this idea was not deemed feasible.

The "Wear a Cotton Dress Every Day" movement was again stressed and a large percentage of the members are checking up daily on it and plan to make a good showing at the coming district convention in Arkansas.

It was announced that the new year books were being assembled and that the next meeting would be recreational in character, with Mrs. B. R. Hamm in charge.

Miss Evelyn Cannon was the guest of Mrs. Ralph Routon for the evening.

I'd like to leave but dallodis to mark our little way. To leave but tulle red and white behind us as we stray. We'd like to pass away from earth and feel we'd left behind. But roses and forget-me-nots for all who come to find. We'd like to sow the barren spots with all the flowers of earth. To leave a path where those who come to find gentle mirth. And when we're called upon to join The Heavenly throng We'd like to feel along our way we'd left no sign of wrong. And yet the cares are many and the hours of toil are few. There's not time enough on earth for all we'd like to do. But having lived and having toiled, we'd like the world to find Some little touch of beauty that our soul had left behind.—E.A.G.

SERVING THE HOPE AREA

one of those rabbit warrens on the East Side. Chuck wants to see you both. How about Thursday?"

Liane said they would be delighted. She was excited at the prospect of seeing Muriel again. She forgot her resentment of a few months before. Muriel seemed more likable since she had married her penniless writing man.

She told Clive about the invitation. He said abstractedly, "I thought you didn't like her."

Liane smiled. "I didn't now and then. She rather snubbed me. But she's fun really. We needn't go if you mind."

"I don't mind. If you'd enjoy seeing them of course we'll go."

SHE took great pains with her appearance the evening of the dinner party. When Clive came into the living room of their suite, she stood in the doorway, smiling at him.

"All ready?"

Liane was in white and silver, the silk cunningly cut and contrived to make her slim figure alluring. She wore her pearls. The diamond bracelet glittered at her wrist.

"We're dining at what time?"

"Seven-thirty. Muriel said to be punctual. Her cook is temperamental."

They descended in the elevator. They were still at the Bleckman, having decided not to take an apartment until after their trip to the far east.

"You look charming," Clive's tone was formal. "I like that frock."

"Thank you. I hoped you would."

She turned her eyes to his with innocent coquetry. Hastily he reached for a cigarette.

"What's that perfume you're wearing?"

"Mimosa. D'you like it?"

"Very much. It's sophisticated for you."

She smiled. "Don't you think I'm sophisticated?"

"I hadn't noticed it."

"Well, I'll learn. Give me time."

She leaned nearer to glance at the sign on the street light. "Oh, I do believe he's taken the wrong street." Her hair just brushed Clive's cheek.

With one abrupt movement, he swept her into his arms. His grasp was hard, compelling.

Liane felt his lips on hers, demanding. She struggled in his clasp.

"You try me too hard, d'you hear?" Those were the words she heard.

As suddenly as he had seized her, he let her go. "I'm sorry. Forgive me. I forgot myself."

She was breathing hard. She put her hand to her lips. "Oh, oh, you hurt me." She was whimpering, like a child who has been frightened.

"I didn't mean to. You're so sweet—so utterly desirable. I went off my head. I tell you I'm sorry."

A great tear trembled on the edge of her lashes. He took a big, soft kerchief and wiped it away.

"Forget it, won't you? I'll not offend again."

HIS tone was gentle, pleading. She could not bear to have him so. She managed to smile. By the time they reached the apartment building in which the young Desmonds lived she was quite composed again. Muriel met them in a flurry of silver tissue and a scent of wood smoke. They were ushered into a small room, crowded with rare furniture and good prints. A long table in one corner was braced with lace and what their hostess airily told them were five-cent dishes. Her candle sticks were Georgian silver, her finger bowls were from Woolworth's.

Chuck appeared presently, smiling and at ease in shabby dinner clothes. They all sat down and a clumsy mulatto in a dubious apron stumbled in and out with delectable food. Mushroom soup which could not have been better at Delmonico's in the old days. Little birds cooked to the color of strained honey. Peas green as lettuce and salad in a Ming bowl. Ice and coffee strong enough to stand alone.

"You do yourself well, Mrs. Desmond," said Clive in mock amazement.

Muriel was casual. "I've learned to cook. Hopsy is teaching me and what she doesn't know I do. Together we manage very well."

It was odd to see the air of matronliness, of satisfaction, she wore.

"These things were grandmother's," she said, waving at the chairs, the graceful small tables. "She left them to me and they were all in storage. Mother performed as usual when she heard I was taking them. Tried to stop me."

Chuck watched her as she chattered, his expression a mixture of pride and amusement.

"She's cute, isn't she?" he asked them both.

They agreed with him. Indeed there was a softness, a bloom about this new Muriel. Liane felt old and staid, tired and disillusioned, beside her.

On the way home Clive was stiff, silent. "I can't ask you to forgive me for behaving so badly," he said at length. "It was unpardonable."

Liane did not answer. He saw she was crying.

"Oh, Lord, I am making a mess of it!" he cried. "I was a fool to think we could make this work."

She checked the childish tears. "You weren't and you can make it work." She faced him staunchly.

BACK in the apartment Chuck lounged in a big chair. Muriel perched on the arm of it.

"Give me a cigarette, darling." He put one between her scarlet,

Escaped girl Bares Harem Horrors

That monster, the Turk, Ali Bey—Those beasts, the eunuchs—Those hideous days, nights—Can she—could any woman—ever forget?

Hipsims, or, in American, Rose, was sixteen—in the first blush of womanhood—when wild Kurdish tribesmen swooped down upon her home—murdered her father—drove her mother to death—tore her screaming sister away—and flung her—a slave—into the harem of that merciless wolf, the General, Ali Bey.

What terrible fate awaited this gently nurtured young girl behind the silken draperies of the harem door? You must read for yourself HAREM SLAVES—the tremendous true-life story of a victim of the Armenian massacres. It is written with a quill dipped in the life blood of a beautiful woman, who, herself, knew the unspeakable cruelties of harem captivity and who tells about them now, frankly, for the first time. You will sit breathless over this gripping tale in September TRUE STORY MAGAZINE. Get your copy—read it today.

Story Hour is now broadcast every Monday night over WEA and NBC Red Network, 10 o'clock New York time.
